LOCATION AND CLIMATE

The Azores are located in the middle of the Atlantic Ocean, 760 nautical miles from Lisbon and 2,110 from New York. Three groups of islands of volcanic origin, with some scholars believe to be the remains of the legendary Atlantis, form the Archipelago. The archipelago is formed by three groups of islands: Eastern (Santa Maria and São Miguel), Central (Terceira, Graciosa, São Jorge, Pico and Faial) and Western (Flores and Corvo).

In its whole, the archipelago comprises an area of 2,323 sq. Km, with São Miguel being the biggest island (745 sq. Km) and Corvo the smallest (only 17 sq. Km).

The Archipelago of the Azores enjoys a privileged climate which is temperate maritime and softened by the gentle influence of the Gulf Stream. There is a little temperature variation with an average of 13°C (55°F) in winter and 23°C (73°F) in the summer. The water temperature also varies little, oscillating between 17°C and 24°C (63°F and 75°F).
